

RECRUITMENT AGENCIES AND ONLINE JOB BOARDS 2009/2010

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

This guide is intended to help students and graduates identify recruitment agencies that can help place them in employment. It includes agencies who have informed The Careers Group, University of London of their services as well as agencies we have identified from industry journals and the internet, but it is not meant to be comprehensive.

The Careers Group has tried to ensure that all the organisations listed here are bona fide; however we are unable to verify the details in their entries and therefore are unable to accept responsibility for their claims.

Agencies which have started up in the last few years may not have as large a client base as the more established organisations. Newer agencies, however, may offer more advanced and/or specialist services. These factors may be worth considering when choosing which agencies to approach. To find out if the services they offer meet your needs, take some time to research the agencies with which you intend to register.

This publication can be provided in alternative formats upon request. Contact the Head of Communication Services on 020 7863 6041.

RECRUITMENT CONSULTANCIES/AGENCIES

WHAT ARE THEY?

Recruitment consultancies match people looking for jobs with job vacancies. They charge the employer a fee for successfully placing job hunters into specific jobs. When placing temporary staff with organisations, agencies usually charge the employer an hourly rate, and then pay the worker themselves. It is always in the agency's interest to find the best person for the job, thereby satisfying their client. For this reason they are unlikely to put you forward for jobs which don't match your skills and experience.

There are different kinds of consultancies. High street chains have a range of positions - often clerical, secretarial and administrative roles. They can be a good source of temporary positions. Many new and well-established agencies have websites with lists of vacancies to browse and the option to register your details online.

Not strictly agencies, online job boards enable employers to display vacancies on the site and email the details to relevant registered candidates. Usually they will not get involved in matching or selecting candidates. Posting your CV on a CV bank allows it to be browsed by subscribing employers. Check the privacy statement of any site to which you submit your CV.

WHY SHOULD I USE A RECRUITMENT CONSULTANT?

- Access to thousands of part-time, temporary and full-time employment opportunities. In some sectors, employers will recruit almost exclusively through agencies.
- Great way of finding opportunities in smaller organisations you may not have heard of, which don't have the resources to invest in the more traditional ways of recruiting.

- Consultancies take some of the hard work out of finding a job and can offer a speedier route into employment. Some will email or text vacancies to you as soon as they receive them from employers.

But...

- Avoid using consultancies as your sole job hunting method. Many graduates become disillusioned when, despite having registered with several recruitment agencies after finals, they have little success in securing interviews.
- Consultancies only have access to a limited section of the job market and some sectors rarely use their services. So make sure you know where the employers you want to target are likely to advertise.

HOW DO I CHOOSE A CONSULTANCY?

- Word of mouth can be a useful tool. Talk to people who are already working in that career area and they should be able to tell you which agencies are commonly used. You could also call the HR department of the organisation you want to work for and find out which agencies they use.
- Specialist consultancies advertise in sector-relevant press. Websites for professional bodies will also sometimes include details of related agencies.
- Go to www.rec.uk.com. This is the website of the professional body for UK recruitment consultancies and has a list of members, which you can search by sector and location. All members must agree to operate under the REC code of conduct.
- Check the number, dates and types of vacancies the consultancy is advertising. Many consultancies have websites which include vacancy details; this can help you to make sure the agency suits your needs.
- Consultancies which have been established for several years most likely will have built up relationships with employers and are perhaps more likely than newer agencies to have a constant supply of vacancies.
- Remember - it is illegal for a consultancy to charge for finding you a job. Some may offer additional services such as CV writing, which will carry a fee, but you should not be required to sign up for any of these services.

HOW MANY SHOULD I SIGN UP WITH?

- Go for a manageable number that will allow you to keep in touch with a consultant at each.
- Keep in mind that signing up with too many agencies in the same sector can result in your details being submitted to the same employer multiple times, making you look desperate.

HOW CAN I INCREASE MY CHANCES OF SUCCESS?

- Be friendly, professional and try to build up a relationship with your consultant. If you impress them, they will believe you can impress an employer.
- Keep in touch. You will not be the only person on that consultant's books, so make sure you don't get overlooked.
- Keep your details up to date. If you acquire new skills or qualifications, let your consultant know. If you are aware that you lack particular skills, try and remedy the situation perhaps by taking a course or doing some voluntary work. Sometimes upgrading your IT skills can help you get your first break. Make sure your CV outlines all of your relevant skills.
- Don't be too proud. You might get offered a job that you think is beneath your capabilities, but if you have limited experience a lower level job can be a great route into an organisation.

HOW SHOULD I USE THIS BOOK?

This book is a good starting point if you are trying to find consultancies interested in graduates. Look at the information, identify those that are relevant to your needs, check their websites and make your approach. Good luck!
